

Heath Row Zine Collection

Quantity: 15 feet (12 record center boxes)

1975 - 2004

Biographical Information

Heath Row was a prolific zinester during the mid-1990's zine heyday. He published the more personal zine, Karma Lapel, before moving on to publish the review and criticism zine, Media Diet. Although he was originally from Fort Atkinson, Wisconsin, Heath graduated from Northwestern University where he studied journalism in the early 1990's. While at Northwestern, Heath busied himself by writing for Northwestern's N Magazine and hosting a radio show on Northwestern's radio station, WNUR. After moving to Massachusetts in 1996 he started working for Fast Company, an online business magazine. He also began writing reviews for both the zine review zine, Zine World, and for the music magazine, Mommy and I are One. Heath currently lives in Brooklyn and continues his media criticism and other writing on his blog, mediadiet.net.

Description

The Heath Row Zine Collection is organized into eight series. The first series, Youth Activities, contains two publications from Heath's high school career. The first is the Badger Bugle Citizen – a daily newspaper that was published at a student government summer retreat that Heath attended in 1990. The second publication is The Signal – Heath's high school newspaper. In one issue Heath is featured in a front page article as the student of the year.

The second series, Northwestern, consists of: a collection of N Magazine – Northwestern's student magazine; records from two organizations that Heath was part of; and two papers that Heath wrote while studying journalism. Heath was the "found text" editor for N magazine between 1993 and 1994. The two organizations that Heath was involved with were Shephard, a student organization, and WNUR. The first paper is entitled "From Fandom to Feminism: A Historical Analysis of the Zine Press." Heath published it later in an issue of Karma Lapel. The second paper is entitled, "Law and Ethics of Journalism."

The third series, Zine Publishing, consists of: four groups that all relate to the publication of Heath's zines; the newsletters that publisher Doug Holland sent to the volunteer staff of Zine World – his review zine; and zine-related articles, clippings and papers that people sent to Heath. The first folder contains three issues of Heath's review/personal zine, Karma Lapel. The second folder contains one issue of Heath's media criticism zine, Media Diet, and some newsletter-style updates. The third folder contains both typed and handwritten drafts of Heath's reviews and notes for his zines. The fourth folder contains contributions for Heath's zines that were sent to him by other zinesters and writers.

The fourth series, Memorabilia, consists of: two of Heath's datebooks from 1996 and 1997; newsletters from the August Derleth Society; and ephemera. The two datebooks are heavily annotated with appointments, concerts, meetings, deadlines both for his zines and for the zines that he wrote for, zine events, etc. The datebooks themselves are zine related in that they were published by John Marr, the publisher of the zine, Murder Can Be Fun. August Derleth was a writer and editor from Wisconsin who sometimes collaborated on horror stories with his friend, H.P. Lovecraft. Heath was a member of the August Derleth Society. The ephemera include a masked wrestling fan-club kit and some playbills.

The fifth series, Correspondence, consists of thirteen folders. The dates range from 1992 to 2004. The folders are organized chronologically and then by the name of the correspondents that wrote a significant amount. These correspondents are: Timothy Costulis, Julie Gerstein, Doug Holland, and Stefanie. There are some notable correspondents in the chronological section. Some of these include: Aaron Cometbus who publishes the zine Cometbus; comic artist and writer Chris Ware; small press comic artist Megan Kelso; small press comic artist Adrian Tomine; John Porcellino who publishes the mini-comic King-Cat; small press comic artist Evan Dorkin; and Cindy Ovenrack who publishes the zine Doris. The Correspondence series also contains letters from Chip Rowe and Kathy Moseley who have donated material to the DePaul Zine Collections.

The sixth series, Zines, is the largest series and is subdivided into the following sub-series: Catalogs, Culture, Fanzines, Literature, Music, Personal, Poetry, Resource, Socio-Political and Special Interest.

Catalogs are mail-order catalogs for zines. For many years, especially throughout the 1990's, zines were mostly bought and sold via catalogs as they weren't readily available in stores. The catalogs usually represented what one person distributed or "distroed." These distros were hubs of zinester communication and information – connecting isolated zinesters living in small towns across the country.

Culture zines focus on a variety of topics – particularly art, music and literature. Fanzines are the original zines. They focus on a topic, frequently comics or science-fiction/fantasy, and are written from a fan's point of view. Literature zines are either anthologies or collections of short stories. Music zines focus on music – usually punk rock, but other types of music are represented.

Personal zines are written by one person and are about that one person. They read like mini-autobiographies and the styles are as varied as the people who write them. Some are diary entries, some are creative non-fiction, some are journals and some are just scribbled thoughts. The personal zines are the most numerous type of zine in this collection.

Poetry zines are similar to literature zines in that they are either anthologies or collections. Some of these could probably be called chap books. Resource zines either review other zines or offer advice on how to make zines. Socio-political zines deal with politics and social issues. Many of the viewpoints that are represented in these zines are those of marginalized communities. Special Interest zines focus on a single topic. Sometimes they are humorous topics while other times they speak from, about and to a particular community – bike messenger, Filipino, queer, etc.

The seventh series, Magazines, is broken into the following sub-series: Media, Music, Socio-Political, and Zine. Media magazines focus on print media in some way. Music and Socio-Political have the same definitions as their zine counterparts. Zine magazines are either about zines and zine culture or they came out of zines or zine culture – some of these magazines started as zines.

The eighth series is Comics. The majority of the comics contained in this series are actually mini-comics. Mini-comics are the comics version of zines. They are self-published and most often they are photocopied. They deal with many of the same issues as zines, but the stories are frequently fictionalized. The main difference between mini-comics and zines is that the people who make mini-comics are more likely to experiment with sizes, formats, bindings, printing styles, papers, etc., than zinesters. The trend in mini-comics, over the past ten years, has been in improving the craft. The mini-comics still retain their self-published and intensely personal feel, but their creators tend to create not only expressions but objects of art.

Provenance

Heath Row donated his papers and zine collection to DePaul University in 1997 (1997.03) following the fourth Underground Press Conference held in Chicago. In 1999 Heath deposited another box of materials and subsequent donations have been added to this accession number (1999.09).

Processing Notes

This collection originally consisted of 18 boxes – approximately 22 feet of material. The processor arranged the series in order of thematic importance. Heath Row's personal papers were placed first so as to provide biographical information. Zines were placed next because they are the most important material in the collection. Magazines were placed after zines because the processed magazines and the zines are of a similar nature. The comics were placed last because, while important, it is the Heath Row Zine Collection. The processor also struggled with the series titles: Culture and Special Interest. These titles are in no way meant to marginalize any culture or community – they were the best terms that could be applied to the material at the time of processing.

Processed: July 2005 – April 2006, Keith Helt.
